ISU Film Producers Club Brings Nicholas Sparks to Iowa State

AMES, IOWA (February 12, 2015) – Iowa State and ISU Film Producers Club is more than welcome to announce a special on campus appearance by Nicholas Sparks, who's award winning novels have also made it to the big screen.

Born in Omaha, Neb. Nicholas Sparks got his start in 1996 when one of his best known stories became known then followed with novels, which have all been New York Times bestsellers and sold millions worldwide.

Sparks will be on campus to discuss Nicholas Sparks Productions, a film and television production company, that currently works with Warner Brothers Television exclusively to produce his novels. Tips on structuring ideas or concepts for films and applying them from written material will be discussed for those interested.

Students and guests are welcome to attend this event, which will take place in the Memorial Union Great Hall on Feb. 28 at 5 p.m.

Shortly after a question and answer period the ISU Film Producers Club will screen, Spark's "The Best of Me" which is now a popular motion picture, starring James Marsden and Michelle Monaghan.

This club is focused on the creation, production and showcasing of student films as well as educating students on film styles, creation, production and appreciation in general. As Iowa State University does not have a film production or film studies major, this club provides an outlet for students who wish to write, direct, produce, video graph, act in, learn about, or simply enjoy films. Through the club, students will write and create short films year-round as well as watch, analyze, and discuss classic and modern films.
